Aston Business School

Assistant/Associate Professor of Finance

Applications are invited for two Assistant/Associate Professor level posts in Finance.

The posts are within the Finance and Accounting group in the Business School.

JOB QUALIFICATIONS: For an Assistant Professor level position, you should have a relevant PhD or be close to completion, and the potential to develop a research record of international standing. For an Associate Professor level position, you should have a track record of high quality international publications, and proven ability to deliver high quality teaching. We welcome applications from candidates across all the major fields in finance, but particularly encourage applications from candidates with research interests in Asset Pricing, Market Microstructure or Experimental Finance. The ability and willingness to teach at undergraduate and postgraduate levels, including dissertation supervision, is essential. We particularly welcome applications from candidates able to teach financial econometrics, derivatives, investment management or fixed income.

ABOUT ASTON BUSINESS SCHOOL:

Aston Business School is one of Europe's leading business schools, with the majority of its research rated world-leading or internationally excellent in RAE 2008, QAA 24/24 for teaching quality and accredited by AACSB, AMBA and EQUIS. There is a thriving research culture and strong demand from well-qualified students for its range of undergraduate, Masters and post-experience courses. The School has recently opened its Thomson Reuters Financial Trading Room, which houses financial simulations and live market data.
