SPECIAL ISSUE

“Navigating the Financial Landscape of a Just Transition: From Sustainable and Human-Centered Development Perspectives”

Guest Editors:

Muhammad Ali Nasir, University of Leeds

Alina Cristina Nuta, Danubius University

Xihui Haviour Chen, Keele University

The Special Issue will comprise a selection of papers on the intersection of Finance and Just Transition

Objective. Stakeholders are actively engaging in addressing pressing challenges, driven by the imperative of a just transition. A cornerstone in navigating this transformative journey is the pivotal role of finance, steering structural changes toward decarbonization while upholding the principle of leaving no one behind. Given its significant role, finance assumes a critical position in this narrative, necessitating the identification of appropriate financial instruments and best practices for a successful just transition. Finance geared toward a fair transition should extend beyond environmental projects, embracing social equity considerations and acknowledging socioeconomic vulnerabilities

This special issue aims to address critical gaps in the existing literature, with a primary focus on expanding knowledge in the field of finance and just transition. We invite high-quality studies delving into economic cost and financial implications, short and long-term, complex impacts of carbon pricing, new development models incorporating financial uncertainty, the transformative role of financial ecosystems, and the impact of just transition measures. By fostering a comprehensive insight, this special issue strives to contribute actionable insights for scholars, policymakers, and practitioners.
